

Publisher's Letter:

His name is known throughout the world and his face seems omnipresent. He is Donald Trump, affectionately referred to as "The Donald." With major business success in high-end construction, as well as resort and casino ownership, there is very little in commerce that has not been touched in some way by the enterprising Mr. Trump. Apprentices adore him and Rosie abhors him, but it is impossible to ignore him. In this issue, Atlanta Golf speaks with the irrepressible Donald Trump and his plans for Atlanta.

Being a publisher is not as difficult as being a son. When my father put his foot on my neck to include an article about Charlie Brown in the magazine—an article that has only a tangential connection with golf—my instinct was to say no. But guilt triumphs over publishing, and the presentation of a wonderful story about an incredible, mostly unknown, episode from World War II is the result. Charlie Brown is a true hero, who, rather than saving his own life, risked death to save the crew entrusted to him. Franz Stigler, too, should be remembered for his chivalrous act of compassion in sparing the Brown crew. We hope that the United States will look back at these heroes of yesterday, who were denied recognition for their heroism, and make amends with appropriate bravery citations without waiting for posthumous awards.

We hope you enjoy this issue of Atlanta Golf. As always, your comments are welcome.
